WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MORGAN ROUSSEAU, MANAGING EDITOR

We knew when Punxsutawney Phil saw his shadow on Feb. 2 we'd be in for six more weeks of winter, but this is ridiculous. Boston was due to get as much as a foot and a half of snow by the time Winter Storm Skyler comes to a close. And with thousands just getting power back last week after a previous nor'easter, it's safe to say we're all chilled to the bone and ready for spring. Read inside on page 4 about what to expect from today's commute, and visit metroboston.us for updates on the forecast.

MASS. BIRTH CONTROL LAWSUIT REJECTED

A federal judge on Monday rejected a lawsuit by Massachusetts' attorney general challenging new rules by President Donald Trump's administration that make it easier for employers to avoid providing insurance that covers women's birth control. U.S. District Judge Nathaniel Gorton in Boston dismissed a lawsuit Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey filed after the administration announced rules allowing businesses or non-profits to obtain exemptions on moral or religious grounds. The ruling came after two other judges in California and Pennsylvania in December issued preliminary injunctions blocking the Republican president's administration from enforcing the rules, which it announced in October.

'HIGHLY LIKELY' RUSSIA BEHIND SPY ATTACK: UK

2 British Prime Minister Theresa May said on Monday it was "highly likely" that Moscow was responsible for the poisoning in England of Russian former double agent Sergei Skripal and his daughter using a military-grade nerve agent. May told parliament that either the Russian state was directly responsible for the poisoning or it had allowed the nerve agent to get into the hands of others. London has given Russia until Wednesday to explain its use. British officials identified the substance as part of the Novichok group of nerve agents which were developed by the Soviet military during the 1970s and 1980s, May said. "Should there be no credible response, we will conclude that this action amounts to an unlawful use of force by the Russian state against the United Kingdom," May said, calling the attack a "reckless and despicable act."

STORMY DANIELS OFFERS TO RETURN 'HUSH MONEY'

4 The adult-film actress who claims she had an affair with Donald Trump before he became president offered on Monday to return $130,000 that Trump's personal lawyer paid her in what she said was hush money to remain silent about the alleged relationship. Stephanie Clifford, who uses the stage name Stormy Daniels, has said the affair with Trump began in 2006 and lasted several months. Trump has denied he had an affair with Clifford. Clifford proposed on Monday that she be allowed to discuss her alleged affair with the president freely after repaying the money. "This is an extremely fair offer," her attorney, Michael Avenatti, said. "It accomplishes the goal of allowing the American people to decide who is telling the truth after hearing both sides." The alleged affair threatens to erode Trump's support among evangelical voters.

WEB INVENTOR: BIG TECH MUST BE REGULATED

5 The inventor of the world-wide web, Tim Berners-Lee, called on Monday for powerful internet platforms and social media companies to be regulated to prevent the internet from being "weaponized at scale." The British computer scientist, in an open letter, said a "new set of gatekeepers" was now dominant, controling the spread of ideas and opinions. "The fact that power is concentrated among so few companies has made it possible to weaponize the web at scale," he wrote. "In recent years, we've seen conspiracy theories trend on social media platforms, fake Twitter and Facebook accounts stoke social tensions, external actors interfere in elections and criminals steal troves of personal data." The intervention by the 62-year-old MIT professor comes as some European governments turn to legislation to curb "fake" news and hate speech.

Forecasters said travel would be impossible on Tuesday morning due to blizzard conditions. GETTY IMAGES

The third nor'easter of 2018 to hit New England

Boston could see as much as 18 inches of snow by Tuesday.

MORGAN ROUSSEAU
morgan@metro.us

New England may be done with winter, but winter is far from finished with New England.

Boston was forecast to get as much as a foot and a half of heavy snow during the latest nor'easter, which is the third the region has seen in less than two weeks.

"We're in full storm mode, all hands on deck."

National Weather Service
Boston branch

The storm, which the Weather Channel dubbed Winter Storm Skylar, was anticipated to cause "impossible travel conditions" Tuesday morning. Forecasters at the National Weather Service expected the storm to start late Monday night — after midnight — and continue through Tuesday, with near-blizzard conditions and snowfall rates hitting between 1 and 3 inches per hour.

The National Weather Service Boston branch told followers on Twitter that they were in "full storm mode" with "all hands on deck."

"Folks, as the latest model data becomes available, we'll be making updates as soon as we possibly can. We're in full storm mode, all hands on deck. We'll do the best to answer everyone's inquiries, but for the time being, find your local forecast at mobile.weather.gov."

At least history buffs have something to celebrate. Forecasters in the National Weather Service Eastern Region branch noted the anniversary of two historic storms — Skylar falls on the 25th anniversary of the Blizzard of 1993, and on the 130th anniversary of the Great Blizzard of 1888.

In addition to whiteout conditions, the tempest is bringing strong winds, forecasters said. In short, residents should aim to stay off the roads if possible on Tuesday.

"Anticipate travel impacts on both commutes on Tuesday," service forecasters wrote, adding that southeastern Massachusetts could see power outages due to falling trees.

Last week, as many as 350,000 Massachusetts homes were still without power thanks to the previous nor'easter, which dropped between 5 and 20 inches over the state.

Boston Public Schools said classes were canceled for Tuesday.

A snow emergency and parking ban was in effect as of 7 p.m. Monday. Residents can park at discounted garages. Check back at metro boston.us for the latest storm updates.

1-3 INCHES

Anticipated rate of snowfall expected per hour from late Monday night through Tuesday.

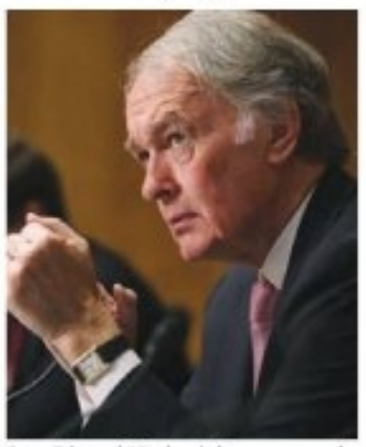
'Mass Act' incentivizes other US states to adopt Bay State's gun laws

The Making America Safe and Secure Act would hand out $20 million in grants each year to states that adopt and maintain gun laws modeled on those in Massachusetts.



Sen. Edward Markey's has proposed federal legislation based on Massachusetts gun laws. GETTY IMAGES

Toughening gun laws in other states, law enforcement officials said, is critical to safety in Massachusetts where over 60 percent of the guns used to commit crimes here come from other states. With Congress and the White House still struggling to agree on a response to the latest mass school shooting, Sen. Edward Markey on Monday presented a new proposal that would offer states incentives to adopt laws modeled off those in Massachusetts, where police have the power to approve or revoke gun licenses.

"The involvement of police chiefs in the licensing process is key. We can't overstate that enough," Markey said at a press conference at Boston Police headquarters in Roxbury.

Markey said his bill — the Making America Safe and Secure Act — would authorize the Department of Justice to hand out $20 million in grants each year for the next five years to states that adopt and maintain laws modeled on those in Massachusetts.

The senator said the focus would be on promoting laws that give law enforcement in other states the authority to deny, suspend or revoke a gun license, similar to what Massachusetts adopted as part of a 2014 gun law reform spearheaded by House Speaker Robert DeLeo.

The senator was joined by Boston Mayor Marty Walsh, sheriffs Steven Tompkins and Peter Koutoujian, Boston Police Commissioner Bill Evans, Stop Handgun Violence co-founder John Rosenthal and local police chiefs. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

10 Times Mark Hamill was the best part of 'Star Wars'

Mark Hamill, the man behind everyone's favorite space farmboy Luke Skywalker, is pretty heroic right here in the real world. EVA KIS

He may seem serious, but Mark Hamill is just planning his next punchline. GETTY IMAGES

1 He inspired a generation

It wasn't the cool spaceships, weird aliens and cutting-edge special effects that made "Star Wars" iconic — it was Hamill's performance as Luke Skywalker. He took Luke from an ordinary, whiny farmboy to the man who saved the galaxy from the worst villain it's ever known.

2 He braves the wilds of Twitter

Twitter's brutal on celebs, but Mark Hamill's all about it — from the haters to the biggest fans, he'll retweet your memes, slide into your DMs, Like posts and troll himself harder you.

3 He likes to keep up with fans

Getting to meet a celebrity as big as Hamill isn't easy, but he still likes to find ways to mingle with fans, which he did by spending 2017's New York Comic Con photobombing people right on the convention floor.

4 He made the "Star Wars" universe more inclusive

Hamill broadened the "Star Wars" universe just a little more by answering a fan's question about Luke's sexuality on Twitter. "His sexuality is never directly addressed in the films," he told @kynoren. "Luke is whatever the audience wants him to be, so you can decide for yourself."

5 He owns his mistakes

Most celebrities would cringe talking about the things they did early on in their careers, and basically any promotional stuff they do in Europe (because things get wild over there). Not Hamill — a fan recently dug up a photo of him from a 1980s German television show. He was rocking a gold lame suit, which Hamill retweeted with a valuable lesson for all of us: "Thanks to the internet — NOTHING EVER GOES AWAY."

6 He's a friend to creatures big and small

A known lover of Carrie Fisher's French bulldog Gary Fisher, Hamill also stuck up for the ice beast that tried to eat him in "The Empire Strikes Back." "When filming [that] scene I was assured my lightsaber swipe toward camera (creature not on set) would simply singe fur 2 scare him off," he wrote about the wampa that had stashed Luke away for a snack in its cave. "Horrified to later see amputation & unnecessary cruelty — Wampa was HUNGRY (not EVIL) — Luke would never do this!"

7 He's not afraid to get political

Americans have never been more politically divided, so celebrities who choose to make political comments risk greater backlash than ever. Hamill hasn't hidden his opinion, whether it's calling out the accusations of Russian collusion and sexual harassment against President Trump, supporting transgender service members or backing the #MeToo movement.

8 He pays good tribute

Mark Hamill and Carrie Fisher weren't just space twins. They were also real-life friends for 40 years. To commemorate one year of her passing, Hamill tweeted two photos of them together — and the perfect piece of fan art to capture her spirit.

9 He's not afraid to criticize his own franchise

To say "The Last Jedi" was controversial is the understatement of the franchise. And Hamill didn't mince words when talking about it to Nightline: "When I read [Episode] 8 I told Rian, 'I fundamentally disagree with virtually everything you've decided about my character.'" Even though he's since walked back that comment, plenty of fans feel the same.

10 He's a fan, too

Hamill understands the power of fiction to inspire and bring people together, and recommends the things that bring him joy, from Fox's genre-bending cop series "Brooklyn Nine-Nine" to Oscar winner Jordan Peele's "Get Out." Once you're done with your most recent rewatch of the "Star Wars" saga, look to Hamill for what to watch next.

Boston chef talks 'Chopped' St. Patrick's Day showdown

Local culinary stars take on New York chefs in a luck of the Irish battle.

MATT JUUL
matthew.juul@metro.us

The Boston vs. New York rivalry continues this week on a special St. Patrick's Day edition of "Chopped."

The "Luck of the Irish" episode, which airs tonight at 10 p.m., will feature a pair of chefs from the Big Apple, as well as local culinary stars Andrei Enikeev of McGreevy's and Alexandra Galvis of the Lenox Hotel's Sólás, who will duke it out in the kitchen using iconic ingredients from the Emerald Isle. Following their appearance on the Food Network competition series, Enikeev and Galvis will throw down in a rematch of sorts at their respective Boylston Street restaurants on Wednesday.

"I always make sure that I cook with my heart."

The Sólás chef tells Metro that she was thrilled to represent the Hub and showcase her skills in Irish cuisine on the upcoming episode of "Chopped."

"When I found out that it was going to be Irish-themed, I was kind of a relieved because at least I know that," Galvis says. "It was a great experience."

Although she definitely knows her way around Irish soda bread and corned beef, Galvis is neither a native of Ireland nor Boston. She actually hails from Colombia, but was forced to flee the war-torn country with her family in 2000, which prompted their move to Massachusetts.

Galvis got involved in the culinary world thanks to a 10-week program at a North Carolina food bank.

After finding her footing with a few early internships and restaurant jobs, Galvis came back to Massachusetts in 2014. Galvis decided to return to the Bay State because she feels at home here and loves the area's diverse food scene and culture.

"I love my Celtics, I love my Patriots," Galvis jokes. "Home, culture, food, that was it. That's what did it."

Following her stint on "Chopped," Galvis hopes she can open up an Irish food truck. However, no matter what kitchen she's in, Galvis wants to make sure her cooking always highlights her love of great flavors.

"I never forget my roots," she says. "I always make sure that I cook with my heart."

AMERICA LOVES TIGER

The self-righteous crowd (i.e., most golf fans) were ecstatic that Tiger Woods' play dropped off dramatically following that bizarre incident in November 2009 when Tiger was chased out of his home by his now-ex-wife Elin Nordegren. Nordegren, you'll remember, was trying to KO Tiger with a golf club after she learned that he had been cheating on her. She smashed out the back window of his car, and then Tiger drove said car into a fire hydrant.

What a night.

Anyway, Tiger has seen his career take an unprecedented nosedive since. In turn, golf's TV ratings have plummeted.

But Tiger was in the mix this past weekend to win something called the Valspar Championship, and it's clear by now that America wants this redemption story to happen. NBC saw a record 3.26 overnight rating on Saturday for its coverage of Valspar's third round. It was the highest rated Round 3 of a PGA Tour event on any broadcast network since friggin' 2006.

Is Tiger a scumbag for being a serial cheater? Yup.

But here's willing to bet that eight out of 10 of your favorite athletes or celebrities are also a-holes behind closed doors, too.

Can't wait for the Masters.

The "Butch from the Cape" of our time, "Carlton in Norwell," believes that Robert Kraft essentially fired Bill Belichick just after the Super Bowl loss to the Eagles and brought back Josh McDaniels to take over for him. The issue, of course, is that Belichick is still the head coach of the Patriots.

Still, it's clear that there is some sort of power struggle going on in Foxboro. The easiest scenarios are as follows: Belichick wanted to trade Brady after this season and go with Jimmy Garoppolo in 2018. Kraft made it clear to Belichick he did not want that to happen, so Belichick essentially told him, "It's your funeral," and traded the heir apparent. In turn — Belichick, in an attempt to make it clear to everyone that he still runs the show, benched Malcolm Butler in the Super Bowl despite Butler's popularity in the locker room.

Brady was one of Butler's top supporters and is reportedly tired of Belichick's cynicism. Here is Gisele Bundchen during this week's final "Tom vs. Time" episode: "These last two years have been very challenging for him in so many ways, and he tells me, 'I love [football] so much and I just want to go to work and feel appreciated and have fun."

"Appreciation" and "fun" was sorely lacking in Foxboro this past season, according to multiple reports. So while Carlton's conspiracy theory is the craziest to date, I'll believe just about anything related to Pats hierarchy drama at this point.

CURSED CELTICS

This Celtics season is starting to feel cursed. First came the gruesome Gordon Hayward injury on opening night, then came the lingering issues Kyrie Irving has been having with his knee, then came the news Monday that Daniel Theis (one of the true feel-good stories of the season) is out for the season with a torn meniscus, and that Marcus Smart has a torn tendon in his right thumb.

The Irving knee issues are particularly worrisome as Irving left Sunday's game against the Pacers with "left knee soreness." This was the same soreness that caused Irving to miss last Monday's game against the Bulls.

Celtics boss Danny Ainge told 98.5's Toucher and Rich last week that Irving will likely "have to manage [the knee soreness] the rest of his career," but added that it's not "anything serious."

Given that Irving is the key to the next championship for the franchise, this is something to be concerned about for sure.
